In 1984, David Axelrod left his job as a Chicago Tribune reporter to go work for Paul Simon’s U.S. Senate campaign. In 1988, he continued on for Simon’s presidential campaign. Axelrod has served as senior advisor to President Barack Obama and to the Obama–Biden presidential transition, as well as senior strategist to Obama’s historic campaign for the presidency in 2008 and his re-election in 2012. Today he serves as director of the Institute of Politics at the University of Chicago, and as a senior political analyst for NBC News and MSNBC. He was recently inducted into the American Association of Political Consultants’ Hall of Fame. His memoir, “BELIEVER: My Forty Years in Politics,” was published in February 2015.

The Morton-Kenney Public Affairs Lecture Series was established in April 1995. Speakers of achievement and reputation in American government and politics are invited to lecture on campus each year.
